Out with the old. In with the new!

The "old" McDonald's restaurant in Burnet, with its attached convenience store, was rapidly becoming past history when this photo was taken on Tuesday morning. A bigger and better McDonald's will be built there soon. Demolition of the old Highland Lakes Shopping Center in Kingsland is expected to clear the site for a new Prosperity Bank branch beginning next month. In the meantime, new construction continues all around Marble Falls (see page 15). More photos can be seen on Facebook.

Scatterthought

You have probably already noticed that this week's front-page picture is not announcing an upcoming event. I had two reasons for that temporary policy change: first, this weekend's big events are the Veterans Day celebrations, and they are on Friday. I didn't want anyone to think that the paper was already out and I was ahead of the game for that one, putting a Veterans Day photo on LAST week's paper. The other reason is just that I had a busy week and didn't feel inspired to look at a building's demolition, and I thought it was very interesting. I would have loved to have a job like that equipment-operator's when I was a teenager. It may not look like my normal "good news," but the bigger, better "new," McDonald's will.

Of course, none of my papers are ever outdated by Friday, and some of them, like this one with its great stories from Llano history, should be kept for posterity (in our not-so-humble opinion). Unfortunately, the history article also requires an explanation: this week I heard a couple of months ago that the online "Portal to Texas History" was making back issues of The Llano News (1904-1957) available to lucky historians like me (or even to innocent bystanders). Well there seems to be some kind of delay, and only 400 issues are available, all between 1921 and 1940, and they are in no kind of order. I scrolled through them and chomped a few that looked the most promising, before I realized that about 80 of the issues were from 1935 and 1936. There will be gaps in my articles, but I plan to share what I can from those two years over the next weeks.

This week, I have some more urgent items to share: one is an "emergency." Not a real emergency, but a planning and training event that will test Llano's emergency preparedness by simulating a major accident with multiple victims during Llano's huge Wawag Unity Open. It will happen next Tuesday morning, and it will lock serious (all kinds of emergency vehicles with sirens on, etc.) Assistant Emergency Management Coordinator Ron Anderson is hoping that many "citizens" will read this and not get too alarmed if they happen to be in town when it all starts happening.

The next one is not an emergency,

Llano History

By JOHN HALLOWELL

February 22, 1916, was a big day in Llano, as the Confederate Monument on the courthouse square was unveiled on Washington’s Birthday by the Daughters of the Confederacy, who had been raising money for years to make it a possibility. A crowd estimated at 5,000 people (“one of the greatest crowds in Llano’s history”) gathered on the square; the high school band provided music in between addresses by Mayor P.H. Calahan and Governor James “Pap” Ferguson. Governor Ferguson had been one of the governors which had constructed the railroad, and was accompanied by his old boss, Captain Joe A. Owens, who had been in charge of the railroad project. It was the governor’s first trip back to Llano in 25 years.

Young Leroy Simpson pulled the string which dropped the curtain from the statue; the event was covered by big-city newspapers from around Texas, and a carnival was held all weekend following the monument’s unveiling.

Other items in that week’s paper described a new “side road” being installed in the Llano National Bank, along with other minor refurbishments; a new “out door” for outdoor movies, to be installed at the corner of Sandstone and Bridge Streets; “just south of the Masonic Temple,” and improvements were being made to Llano’s Opera House, including a new lobby and entryway at the front of the building.

The headline on the front page of The Llano News on July 19, 1917, said “State Highway Through Llano State Highway Commission designates road as one of Great System of State Highways.” The story reported that the commission had designated a road, to run “west from Austin. through Leander. Liberty Hill, Bertram, Burnet, Llano, Mason and up to Brady” as part of “Highway No. 20.” The article opined that “the value to farmers” from having “the city placed on this one of our great highways...will be incalculable...” and continued by saying “No other one thing will do more for Llano than this road.”

Other articles that week were titled “16 German Vessels Sunk in North Sea” and “Boots Continue in Petrograd” as World War I raged on across Europe. Czar Nicholas II of Russia had been overthrown and imprisoned a few months earlier, but Russia was in chaos and three top officials in the newly formed government (before the Bolsheviks took over and executed the royal family) had resigned the previous week.

Two other items that appeared in that week’s paper were a new fire wagon, supplied by G. Boggs & Son, was placed into service in Llano and A.G. Burnett, formerly of the Guiter Hotel in San Antonio, became the new manager at Llano’s Don Carlos Hotel.

On September 8, 1921, the headline read, “Granite Convention Was Great Success.” An article told how the Retail Monument Dealers Association of Texas had met for three days in Llano the previous week, enjoying sessions at the Opera House, the Don Carlos Hotel, the courthouse, the home of Tom Norton, the High school baseball field and the quarry of the Cassaday Granite Company. The attendees were so delighted with Llano’s hospitality that they voted to re-convene there for the next year’s convention.

Other news items that week told how the new gin had turned out its first bale of cotton, and how workers were beginning to “re-light” the Llano bridge with new timbers, installed on the structure's east side.
This mural by artist Gin Schwambe shows the fabulous Don Carlos Hotel engulfed in flames. The 1923 fire destroyed a center of Llano’s social life and marked the symbolic close of the “boom years” there. Charles and Sandra Stocum’s book store now occupies the hotel site on Eades Avenue, and the mural can be seen there.

“...at a time so as to ‘open the bridge to traffic as often as possible.”

On April 18, 1929, the big news in Llano was: 1) the new community hotel on Sandstone Street, where the final work by painters and electricians was expected to be completed by the end of the week; a Grand Opening was expected in May, after furniture had been installed. And 2) a contract for paving ten blocks of streets in downtown Llano from the new hotel to the store of F.A. Kethman in North Llano from the Watkins-Jinks Furs dealership on East Main Street to the Methodist Church on West Main, and the two remaining sides of the courthouse square. The contract had been awarded to Brown & Aetzel, work was expected to begin within two months and to be completed two months after that.

The huge heat wave June 20, 1935, screamed: “Friday’s Flood Washed Out Bridge.” A telegram said “South side was without lights three days. No water yet on river. River higher in history; must be a major rise.” The article began: “The worst disaster Llano has had in many years occurred last Friday afternoon, when the Llano River went wild and washed out the steel bridge over the stream here. The river began to rise about eight o’clock in the morning and continued to rise steadily until the water had taken the bridge out. Engineers surveyed the approach on the south end and mounted a height estimated at between forty and fifty feet above normal.”

This grainy photo, from a digital copy of The Llano News in 1938, shows the 1922 bridge just moments before it was washed away in the historic flood. The current Llano River bridge was completed in 1936.

“This bridge gave way before the crest of the morning’s rise had been reached. The north side of Llano is without water from the pipes of the Texas Public Utilities Corporation owing to the fact that the main switch which served that side of the river went across the bridge. Electric power was cut off by the breaking of the transmission line across the river about three o’clock Friday afternoon. The north side, however, has had electric power at all times. Service was restored in the south side Monday morning.”

Llano was without means of communication with the outside for over 24 hours, until the roads would permit travel to Fredericksburg by way of Castell. The water began to fall early in the afternoon Friday, but another rise came down that night around ten o’clock, which put the river at some three feet higher elevation than the morning flood. The majority of the damage, however, had been done in the morning.”

In addition to the loss of the bridge over the Llano in town, the one at Castell was washed out and lack of water from the river damaged the Flag Creek bridge and washed out the Pesan Bridge on the Valley Spring Road. The bridge at the Colorado River in Marble Falls was washed out by the Llano River flood after it had gone down the Colorado.”

We will continue with Llano history from 1935 and 1936 over the next few weeks.

Gibby moves in with his friend, Hank Russell (Guy Gober), who is also separated from his wife (Margo, played by Laura Gil). A complicated plan is hatched to restore harmony, and (although it fails hilariously) all the characters find happiness in the end! The show continues this weekend and next (see ad at left).
Mormon Mill on Display

An amazing new display at the Falls on the Colorado Museum in Marble Falls, recalls the contributions of Lyman Wight and his hardy band of Mormon pioneers, who built a mill in Burnet County in 1851 (before it was officially Burnet County). The display was designed by local architect Marley Porter and built with 200-year-old lumber by craftsman Kenneth McBride, both pictured at left. The display can be visited from 10 to 4 on Thursday, Friday and Saturday each week. A Veterans Day program will be held at the museum at 11:30 this Friday.

Author Melvin C. Johnson, who wrote a history of Lyman Wight’s adventures in central Texas called “Polygamy on the Pedernales,” gave a short talk at the Open House last Saturday at the Falls on the Colorado Museum. Although the “Mormon Mill” was sold to Noah Smithwick in 1853, their presence had a lasting effect on settlements in the area, and the “Mormon Mill” name remains in common use today.

Construction in Marble Falls

Above: Not quite so close as the zoom lens makes it appear, the planned PEC Northwest Operations Center will still be a close neighbor to the famous “Bluebonnet House” just north of Marble Falls when it is completed next summer. At right, Partially-constructed apartments loom behind the architect's sketch of the “Homestead at Mormon Mill” complex on Max Copeland Drive.
