Isolated patches of bluebonnets began popping up more than a month ago, but as of this past week there are fields full of the Texas State Flower at various locations around the Highland Lakes, and most highways are lined at least intermittent patches of blue. The photo above was taken last Friday just north of the Lighthouse Country Club in Kingsland. You can see more photos from that neighborhood on page 16, and dozens more bluebonnet photos in the “Just Bluebonnets” album on our Facebook page (Highland Lakes Weekly).

I keep joking about someday working for National Geographic, even though I don’t really have the skills or the equipment to qualify. But every once in a while, as with this chance shot of a butterfly on Moore Street in Llano, I start thinking that I might have a chance!

Scatterthought

I always say, “A small-business owner has to wear a lot of hats,” and I’ve occasionally published pictures to illustrate my point. Today I’m wearing my camouflage hat. (But I won’t show you a picture!) Ever since the bridge collapsed, I have been seeing news reports that give 1969 as the year that the original bridge was built; some go on to say that 1969 was also the year of Kingland’s first Aqua Boom. (Apparently, not everyone has carefully read my book, “LBJ and the Re-Birth of Kingland.”)

I believe that I have conclusive evidence that the bridge was built in 1968, as the resident cumberland I am going to devote a page in this week’s paper to proving my point (see page 13). I firmly believe that if you are going to put a date in a history, you should use the right one.

Despite several calls and emails to TxDOT, I have not been able to get the correct date into their reports, and most news organizations use their history to report the bridge. (I finally got a note from someone at TxDOT who said — about the Llano News article — “I read this as a story about the impact of the bridge for the area, not about the status of the project. The completed date is the accepted date we use for all projects.”)

Well, it still seems wrong to me to list a project as "built" a year after it was "opened" so I am not satisfied with that answer. I will continue to bristle when I see news stories saying the bridge was built in 1969 (but I do want to compliment TxDOT on the remarkable efficiency they have shown in building the replacement bridge — and I am thrilled to hear that they may soon be considering the possibility of naming the new bridge after Kingsland heroes David and Pat Enloe, who made Kingsland and Aqua Boom famous with their wonderful "Enloe’s Outlaws" ski team.)

Which brings me to the other point, one which doesn’t seem quite so important to me. The first Aqua Boom was held in 1970, and this year’s event will be the “50th Annual Aqua Boom” (but NOT the “50th Anniversary”). The easiest way to explain is to say that the first anniversary is a year later than the first event! If the first EVENT is “year one,” then “year fifty” is 49 years later. The first ANNIVERSARY is on “year two” and the 50th Anniversary is on year 51 (next year). The only reason I worry about that distinction at all is because the tendency is to say that the first Aqua Boom was 50 years ago that would give you the wrong year of Aqua Boom’s beginning, and I want everyone to always remember that it was 1970.

It was the new bridge which led to the first Aqua Boom. Lackland Air Force Base’s R&R camp in Kingsland (Camp Warhawk) had already been putting on a fireworks show each Fourth of July, and in 1969 (the first July that the bridge was open), the fireworks show was held at the new bridge. But it wasn’t until that winter that the Kingsland Chamber decided to hold a community-wide “Aqua Boom” festival the following summer, and it wasn’t until 1970 that the first Aqua Boom was held. It was based at the bridge, with a decorated boat parade and the fireworks show held there, but there were more activities around town and Aqua Boom grew each year after that.

That’s probably more than enough ranting for one week, but I would like to point out that my aversion to inaccurate dates does not mean that everything I say is exactly right. Even though I think I care more about historical accuracy than most, I still get things wrong quite often (and I appreciate those who politely point out my mistakes).

The nationally-known Dubbeld Family singers thrilled their audience at Highland Lakes Baptist Church last Sunday evening with a selection of praise music ranging from original songs like “The Shake’s In Trouble” to the “Hallelujah Chorus” from Handel’s “Messiah.”

Mothers and youngsters enjoyed a “Coffee and Chaos Day” at the Kingsland Library’s back meeting room last Friday morning.

Long-time local engineer and real estate investor Brad Shaw says he has never seen an artesian well in Kingsland — until now! He drilled a 140-foot well on a lot in central Kingsland last week, and water has been bubbling up out of the top ever since (without any kind of pump). An artesian well is defined as: “A well drilled through impervious strata to reach water capable of rising to the surface by internal hydrostatic pressure.”

Wakepoint LBJ employees, Chamber members and representatives from VP Racing Fuels gathered around as Jody Bowers (Wakepoint CFO) and Gary Gabriel (district manager for Convenience Management Services, Inc.) cut a ceremonial ribbon at Wakepoint’s Grand Opening last Saturday.

With the RM 2900 bridge already stretching halfway across the lake, work crews seem almost ready for another load of 68-foot beams. While the project is slightly behind schedule, the bridge is still expected to be finished by May.

Llano County officials and staff members for state officeholders had lunch together on the Boat Town Burger Bar porch after taking a tour of the RM 2900 bridge construction site last Friday morning.

Hole sponsors set up booths at each of the holes during the Kingsland Beautification Golf Tournament last Saturday; new Chamber members Suzee and Matt Thompson, of The Country Dog, took advantage of the occasion to hold a ceremonial ribbon-cutting. November of 1972 in Kingsland

The Kingsland Municipal Utility District (KMUD), now a major factor in Kingsland's growth and development, was still just an interesting possibility in November of 1972. After voters in 38 area subdivisions approved the plan, KMUD was formed. It now provides sewer collection and treatment, septic system waste treatment, trash grinding and recycling services for residents in its jurisdiction.

By JOHN HALLOWELL

Kingsland was still largely a tourist town in 1972, but things were still busy in November. One news item at the end of October announced a broom and mop sale by the Kingsland Lions Club, the proceeds of which would be used to help form a Boy Scout troop in Kingsland and to pay for maintenance and improvements at Lions Park. Another news item reported that the 5th Annual Highland Lakes Arts and Crafts Trail would be held (in several Highland Lakes towns and in Austin) on the first two weekends of November. Kingsland's show would be held at the Catholic Church Parish Hall. The Alpha Theta Lambda chapter of Beta Sigma Pi announced plans for a Halloween Carnival during an October 23 meeting at the Chicken Coop restaurant, and the Kingsland Garden Club advertised "over 100 per cent" to its annual fall flower show at Barrow Hall. The November 9 Highlandker carried a front-page article headlined "Kingsland Utility District by Spring?" The article reported that "38 subdivisions in and around Kingsland could see construction of a sewage system begin by as early as this spring," and noted that the Texan Water Rights Commission would be considering the possibility of putting the question to vote at one of its meetings in December. Voters in a district of about 3,600 acres would decide; if they voted in favor, five directors would be chosen to apply for federal grants. The article noted that there were 1,331 single-family dwellings in the district, plus 147 commercial establishments. Permanent residents were estimated at 1,827 and part-time residents at 1,482. A new construction was at a standstill pending some kind of news about the sewer system's future.

Fishermen were complaining about a new hurricane fence erected by the LCRA just below Wirtz Dam. That spot on the south side of the lake was considered the area's best fishing spot, but the cliffs were dangerous and the area had been trashed by users.

Publisher Bob Bray opined that "it is a wonder that thru the years cars have not plunged off the unprotected bluff" and pointed out that "Many fishermen have tumbled into the deep pool below the dam, and several have drowned."

Hazel Cook and Blanchie Hobson formed an "unofficial" Humane Society in Kingsland; Mrs. Cook was quoted as saying "Something has to be done about these stray dogs and cats," but "we could use some help!"

The Kingsland Chamber of Commerce discussed "needs of the Kingsland community" at its October meeting. A community building and more active new members seemed to be the most pressing needs. Owner Bill Jones, of Travis Lodge, offered to put 51,000 in escrow pending specific plans for a new building. The Kingsland Lions Club reported "good sales" from their broom and mop sale at the Kingsland Shopping Center.

An interesting article on "Indian Depredation" in the Highland Lakes area told the story of George Washington, a member of the "Washington family," near present-day Highland Haven whose two sons were attacked by an estimated 12 Comanche warriors who were carrying off a child at the future location of Kingsland in 1869. Hiram Wolfe (15) was killed and "Wash" Wolfe (12) was temporarily captured by Comanche warriors, and only the citizens of Kingsland kept the raiding party from arriving in Llano County.

A headline on November 16 said "Kingsland Women Team Up in Youth," and the story told how rumors were spreading around the community of a cult of hippies from up north, who were living on a ranch near Kingsland. The article revealed that ten young people (including several young men with "collar-length hair") were living at a ranch owned by the Washington family. The couple consisted of Walter Jones and his wife, Nancy, who were associated with Calvary Hill Church in Kingsland. Three of the 10 young people were the Jones' children, and one other was a teen-age girl. Mrs. Jones told the reporter that the purpose of the ranch was to provide a "Christ-centered recreational outlet" for area youth. Rumors that the ranch had applied for a grant to serve as a drug-rehabilitation center proved groundless, and fears were further allayed when Mrs. Jones and "a few of the boys" attended a meeting of the Beta Sigma Pi sorority to answer questions about the ranch. Chamber president Joe Cox told the reporter that he believed "the people's intentions are good," but he did not feel comfortable with the idea. He added that the ranch was "private land," and that the owners "could do anything they pleased."

A photo that week showed a huge generator, intended for the Horseshoe Bay power plant, which had arrived by railroad a week earlier. It would be hauled across the lowed dam and to the construction site by truck.

The Kingsland news section that week reported that the Underhorse Lodge was ready for the deer season. The local reporter noted that "the participating companies which maintain this private lodge service do not report any trouble with the deer.”

Another small item in the Kingsland section reported that attorney Joe Carotheres had opened a law office in Kingsland, and that his permanent residence would be "Near Kingsland in Llano County." 1973.

Commander Roy Holt, of Kingsland's American Legion Post 437, presented a Meritorious Service award to Attorney Jim Carothers for the underway Llano 437 Legion members by donating $50 for a TV antenna at the post.

Administrator Jack Whyburn, of the Highland Lakes Beach, attended a meeting of the Women's Culture Club in Llano, telling them that the first boy was enrolled at Buckner Boys Ranch in Austin. With the help of Sandy Springs, the first 500-footh section of ski slope was expected to be open on December 15: an additional 1,000 feet was planned for the 1973-74 season.

The formation of a new square dance group was announced near the end of November, and a dance was planned for February at the Silver Camp. Johnny Mathis, of San Antonio, would be the caller, and dancers from around the Highland Lakes area were expected to attend. Hunting season began with freezing temperatures in the mornings and intermittent rain, but hunters and fishermen both reported good catches. In December, the Texas Parks and Wildlife reported that roughfish ratios in Lake LBJ had decreased from between 85 and 90 percent before the lake was lowered in April 1971 to just over 50 percent in 1972, but TP&W project leader Wade Butler said "They're on the upswing again." His department was conducting part of a before-and-after study of Lake LBJ to determine what effect the new power plant would have on local marine life.

LBJ Bridge Puts End To Ferry Era
KINGSLAND — With the opening of the new bridge across the Llano River area of Lake Llano in 1968, the ferry across the lake at Kingsland no longer exists.

Jim Stumpf, former manager of Llano and now of Alpine, opened the new ferry, with the “old ferry across a fresh water estuary of the Mississippi River” still in operation. The new ferry is operated by Jesse Johnson and his family, who are now in charge of the ferry operation.

The building of the bridge is an example of the state’s commitment to provide efficient transportation. Stumpf said that the bridge will continue to be used for ferry service.

These two 1968 newspaper clippings (from the November 28 Llano News and from a Marble Falls Highlander in early December) seem to be quite conclusive proof that the original RM 2900 bridge was open for traffic before Christmas in 1968. TxDOT says the project was not completed until 1969, so that is the year the bridge was “built.”
The Highland Lakes Master Gardeners Association quilt committee has made this beautiful “Sprinkled with Love” quilt to be raffled off at the 21st Annual Hill Country Lawn and Garden Show, scheduled for 9 to 3 on Saturday, March 30, at the Burnet Community Center (401 E. Jackson). There will be three free programs during the show: "TOMATOES 101" by Ricky Lane at 9:30, Hill County Wildflowers and more by Sheryl Yantis at 11 and Let’s talk Butterflies (again by Sheryl Yantis) at 12:30. This is a free family show with Children’s booth, Silent Auction, garden supplies, equipment, succulents, Native Plants, vegetable plants and much more. Food will be available for purchase.

Members of the Highland Lakes Retired Teachers recently took a field trip to the National Fish Hatchery at Inks Dam. The HLRTA will meet again at 1 p.m. on Tuesday, April 9, at the Marble Falls Church of Christ. All retired public school personnel are invited to attend.

2019, the Wesley Respite Center will meet on Thursdays at the First United Methodist Church in Marble Falls (across from HEB). The program is designed for folks with early to moderate stages of dementia who live at home, and provides caregivers a few hours of respite while offering entertaining and caring programs for the participants. An interview is required prior to participation. Contact Barbara Van Tassel at 830-693-4401 for additional information.

And here’s an ad that was too late to get on the Classified page: “Free. Due to Health must find good homes for my beloved dogs. Male Schnauzer no papers. Very cute and affectionate female Shih- zu Schnauzer mix. All dogs are groomed and current on shots. Call 325-423-3217 for info.”

While progress on the new RM 2900 bridge is definitely the biggest news story in Kingsland, there are a multitude of smaller-scale rebuilding successes going on in Kingsland every day. One of them is the new Boat Town marina in the foreground of this bridge photo, a complicated project successfully completed by Gilde Welding & Fabrication (see ad below). Boat Town has continued to make improvements at their beautiful new complex; stop by and see them!

A large and enthusiastic crowd gathered at Saint James Lutheran Church’s Schofield Hall in Llano for a fundraising banquet to benefit Young Life. Keynote speaker Kurt Cotter, at left, told the crowd about the faith-based group’s goals and successes before introducing a sizable group of Young Life teens who volunteered to help at the event. Young Life describes its mission as “introducing adolescents to Jesus Christ and helping them grow in their faith.” It provides safe, fun activities as a way to build personal relationships.

Above, left: Brandon Edwards, Young Life leader for the Kingsland and Llano area, recognizes Dean and Cindy Campbell, who led the effort to bring Young Life to Llano and continue to be very active in the program.

Two high school seniors told their own stories of how Young Life has impacted them in their high school years. Brooks Klee (above) and Ashley Ziker (at right) gave a heartfelt endorsement of the group and the people who run it. Below: a collage of pictures documented some YL adventures.
Above: The Watchmen gospel quartet provided live entertainment at the Young Life Banquet in Llano on Monday evening.

At left: Dick and Emily Gimbie will be two of many fine musicians at Llano’s Fiddle Fest Weekend, where they will perform in a concert at the Lantex Theater on Saturday evening, April 6.

Below: The Free Ride band entertained the crowd at Wakepoint LBJ’s Grand Opening last Saturday evening.
These vintage vehicles add to the old-timey atmosphere on River Oaks Drive in Kingsland, but it looks like there's a "For Sale" sign in the window of at least one! If you're a collector, you might want to check it out.

The new “Welcome to Kingsland” sign, which has been accumulating medallions from local churches and civic groups, finally has the actual message included. The new wording was installed across the bottom of the sign earlier this month by the Kingsland Lions Club, whose logo appears at the center of the top row. Other entities represented (so far) are: the Kingsland Masonic Lodge, Lambda Nu sorority, Packsaddle Fellowship, Kingsland Community Church and St. Charles Borromeo Catholic Church.

The lucky winner of the Friends of the Kingsland Library’s 2019 Winter Quilt Raffle was Annette Maddern (center). The beautiful quilt, donated by a Kingsland Library patron, was presented by Library Director Amber Milam (left) and FOKL Vice-President Gayle Shirley. Proceeds from the raffle will help encourage literacy in Kingsland.

Marble Falls author Jen Waldn (pictured at right) will discuss her novels of small-town Texas life and her journey as a writer at the Herman Brown Free Library’s Coffee Talks program on Thursday, April 11. The talks take place the second Thursday of each month, starting at 1:30 p.m. with refreshments, followed by 2 by a presentation and questions.
The First United Methodist Church of Burnet hosted its annual Souper Supper fundraiser last Friday evening. Diners were able to sample about a dozen soups and vote for their favorite; proceeds benefited Vet Rides and Mission Support. Four of the Vet Rides volunteers present are pictured at left: Marshall Claiborne, Sophie McCoy, Al Hancock and Claire Nybro.
